Teaching Material for German as a Foreign Language for all levels: A1-C1

Berlin - More than 100 pages of new teaching material for your German class: The Berlin-based E-Learning specialists at LinguaTV (www.linguatv.com) have expanded their range of teaching material for language trainers.

In order to consolidate the success of the learning process, more and more language schools integrate web based applications into their live classes, better known as Blended Learning. Increasingly popular at universities and language schools is the use of the online platform LinguaTV: The video-based online courses combine authentic, relevant dialogues by native speakers with interactive exercises and games, which are available to learners 24/7.

"Our team of foreign language trainers has created new material for live German classes. For the levels A1, A2, B1, B2 and C1 new vocabulary cards, gap-filling exercises, as well as reading exercises have been created, all of which are linked to a respective video unit on the platform," says Philip Gienandt, CEO at LinguaTV GmbH. Language trainers can download the material directly from the company's webpage.

In the multimedia German courses as well as the new teaching material, the focus is predominantly on vocabulary which is relevant to practical situations. This is why the teaching material on offer prepares learners for their doctor's appointment (level A1-A2), for example, or idioms of the German language (level B2-C1). Moreover, there is another focus on regional and cultural studies through the presentation of various cities in the German-speaking region, literary texts in the form of audio books, as well historical events with the help of contemporary witnesses.

The download material for language trainers is ready to be printed and can be used as a mastercopy - this way you can take it directly to your language class.
